

What is the Amandla Omoya Trust?

The Trust was established by Jeffreys Bay Wind Farm (RF) (Pty) Ltd (also known as the Jeffreys Bay plant or the Jeffreys Bay project company) as part of the Renewable Energy Independent Power Producer (REIPP) programme implemented by the government to assist in alleviating South Africa's electricity shortage.

The Trust owns 6% of the Jeffreys Bay plant. The Trust owns this share through its 'trust company'. This means that when profits are made by the Jeffreys Bay plant the trust receives 6% of it. This is paid in 'dividends' to the trust company and then on to the trust.

However, the trust had to take loans to buy its 6% share in the Jeffreys Bay plant. For several years from the time the trust was established, this debt had to first be paid with almost all the funds received by the trust. In 2020 the loans were finally settled and the trust is now able to start funding more community development projects.

The Trust is an independent entity that is governed by trustees who have been appointed to ensure that it is run in an effective, efficient, responsible, and accountable way.

What does the Amandla Omoya Trust do?

The Amandla Omoya Trust supports social and economic advancement within a 50 kilometer radius from the Jeffreys Bay Wind farm. The Trust does this by partnering with local people and their organisations to build strong, vibrant, safe and prosperous communities that have more social and economic equality than in the past. It supports community-driven initiatives through grantmaking, capacity building and other activities.

After consultation with communities, a review of grant applications that it has received in the past, and analysis of needs, gaps and opportunities in the places where it works, the trust has decided to give priority to community organisations that focus on the following activities for now:

- Market and enterprise development: Skills and enterprise development in farming, fisheries and tourism, with a particular focus on young people.
- Mobility support: Self-sustaining initiatives to provide mobility support for physically impaired people, linked to enterprise development where possible.
- Food: Community-based nutrition initiatives that support vulnerable people including children and elderly people, with priority given to initiatives that produce food locally and/or source their food supplies from small local suppliers.

The Trust provides grants to organisations who apply for support to run these activities. Grants are given through a competitive process where many groups apply and their applications are assessed in comparison to each other, normally through an open call for grant applications.

The Trust also runs its own programmes, which includes:

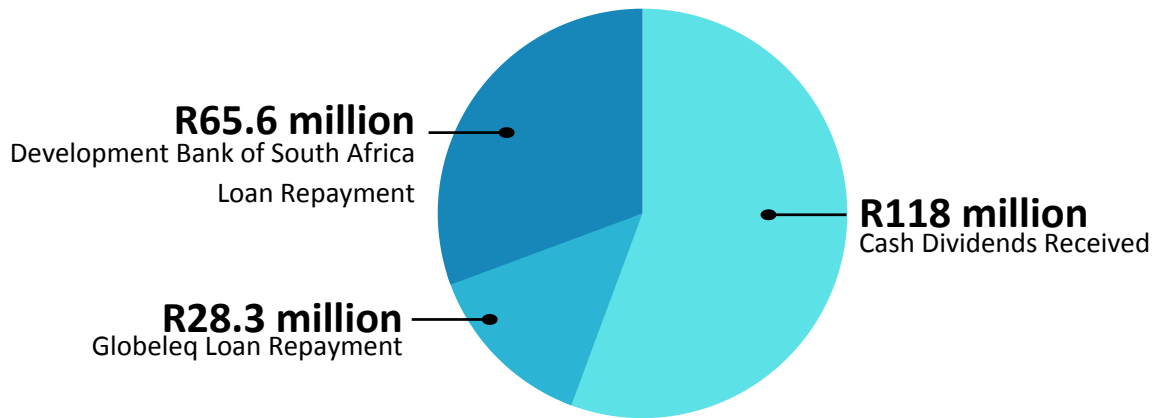

- supporting young people in school and out of school develop life skills that prepare them to be job-ready or ready to participate in further education and skills development opportunities; and
- giving educational and skills development bursaries to young people

What has the Amandla Omoya Trust been spending on?

Since 2014 when the Jeffreys Bay plant started operating, the trust company received R211.9 million.

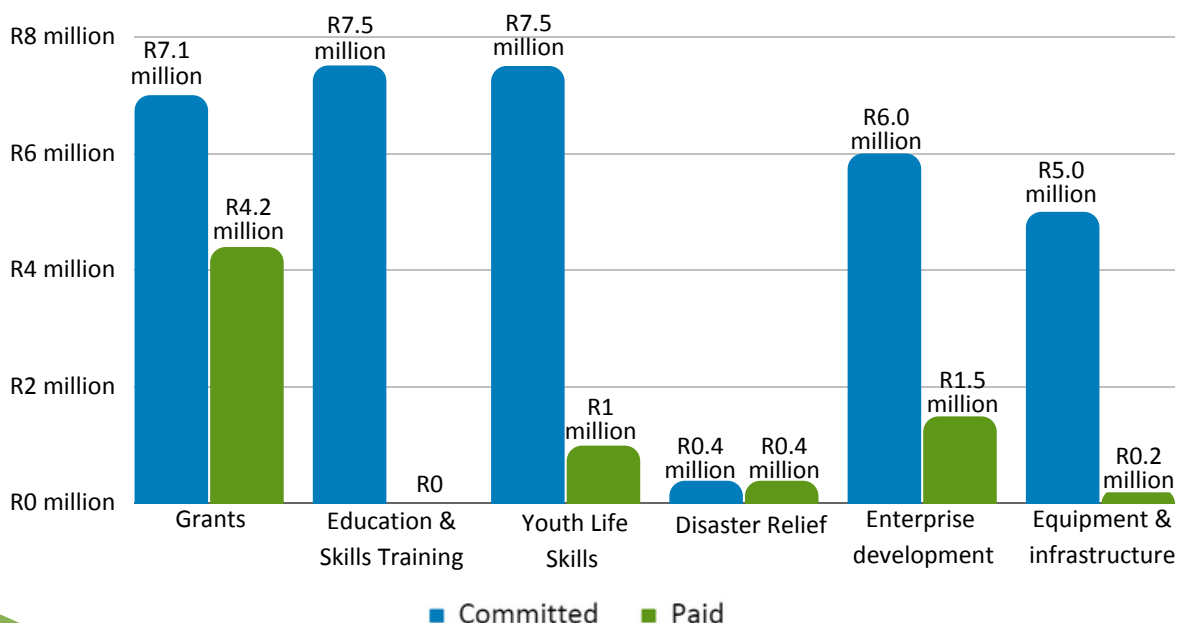

This includes a lump sum amount of R76.5 million received when the Jeffreys Bay project company was refinanced. These funds need to be retained and invested to ensure that the trust gets enough funds to give in support of community development projects over the next 10 years, otherwise the amount of money available will go down in the coming years.

The total amount paid to settle the original debt was R93.9 million, leaving R118 million. The table and chart below shows how dividends were used to pay the debt. All the debt was paid up in December 2020.

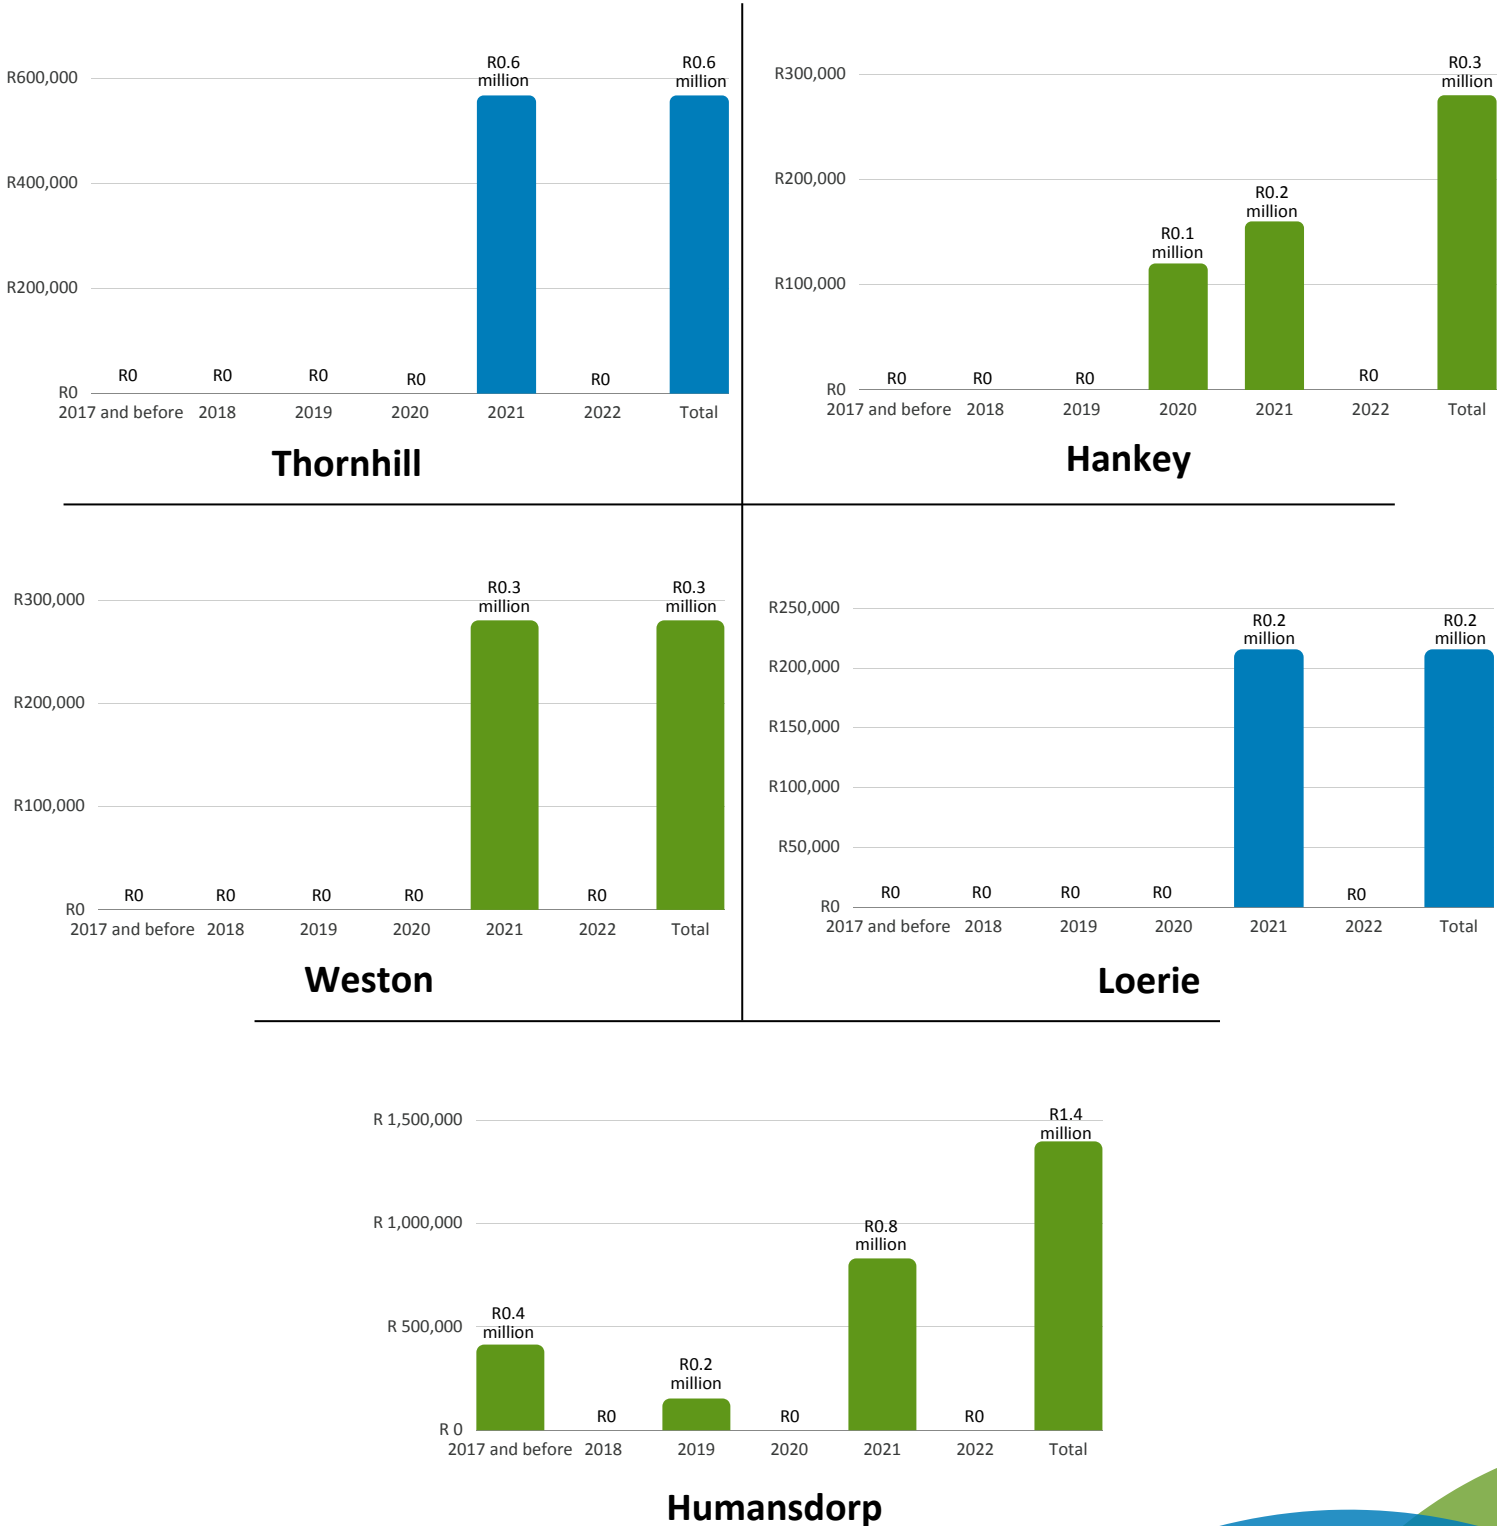

The Trust wants to manage its funds responsibly and invest in long term community development initiatives over several years as well as respond to more immediate needs. It therefore gives grants each year but also sets aside money for initiatives that will run over a few years, such as youth development and bursaries for education and skills development.

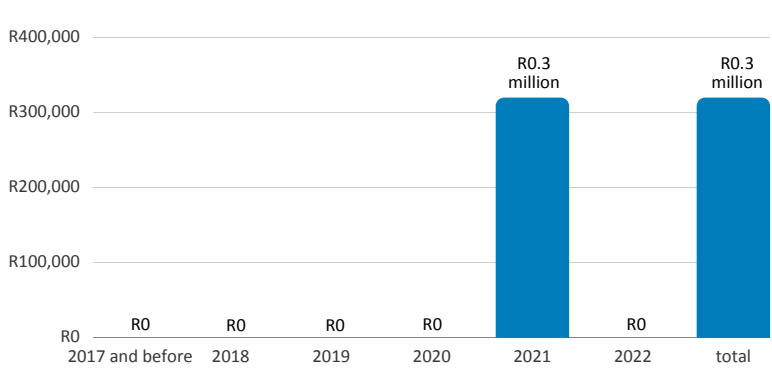

The graph below shows the total amount of money the trust has already committed (set aside) to the various initiatives that it focuses on, compared to the total amount of money actually paid to beneficiaries so far from the funds that have been set aside.

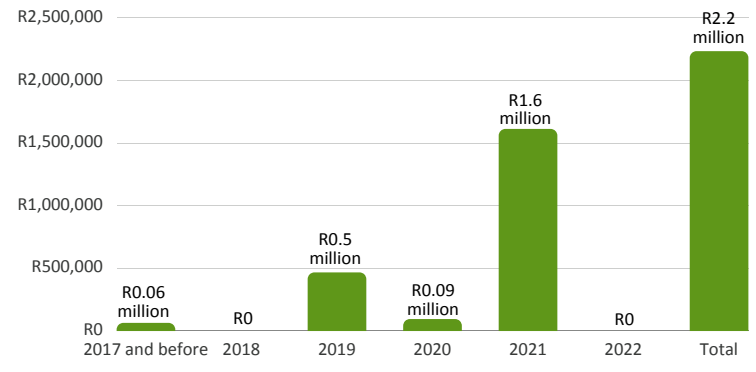

The graph below shows the amount of money that the trust has committed to the communities since inception. This money is for various community-based initiatives as shown in the previous graph. The total amount committed to Thornhill is R566 thousand, Hankey is R280 thousand, Weston is R280 thousand, Loerie is R215 thousand, Humansdorp is R1.4 million, Patensie is R320 thousand and Jeffreys Bay is R2.2 million.

The Trust has committed money to some big initiatives, such as youth life skills, education & skills training, infrastructure and enterprise development which spreads across all communities. This is shown in the radius wide graph below, totaling R28.2 million.

Like any other organisation, the trust incurs costs to operate and achieve its purpose. From the trust's inception until February 2019 Globeleq (the majority shareholder in the Jeffreys Bay plant) managed and funded the operations of the trust until the trust could manage its own operations. This Trust took the big step in March 2019 to manage its own operations. This took a lot of planning and some really big decisions. At this point the trust also paid back to Globeleq the funds it owed relating to managing and funding the Trust.

The chart below shows the operating costs compared to the money allocated for grants and programmes each year up February 2023.

The detail below shows the total amount of money spent on community development and operations. R38.1 million out of R43.7 million spent was allocated to grants and programmes, and R5.6 million was used for operating costs since the inception of the trust. These indicators include the numbers predicted for the current year.
